Bramley Hidden Railway from WW1

A talk by David Wickens at the Willis Museum
21st January 2027 at 7.30pm sharp

A railway of the First World War that subsequently played a critical role in the Second World War and would ultimately survive, largely unaltered and still in everyday use, until the late 1980s. Shrouded in official secrecy for most of its operational life, very little has previously been known about the Bramley Military Railway.
